By Egon von Greyerz

In this week's KWN interview Egon von Greyerz takes a closer look at the bond market which is one of the biggest bubble in history with the potential to bring down the financial system.

Egon explains why governments cannot afford interest rates above zero, he highlights the interdependencies in our global financial system and the consequences leading to defaults and helicopter money.

Egon continues to talk about the various countries issuing 50 and 100 year bonds which will mature worthless. Last but not least he presents a very interesting 225+ year chart of the 10 year US treasury bond showing yield rather than the price of the bond...
