

There is No Such Thing as a Free Market – Engdahl

written by Edward Maas | July 16, 2013

“The Matterhorn Interview – July 2013: Part 2, F. William Engdahl”

German investigative journalist Lars Schall met economic researcher and geopolitical analyst F. William Engdahl for a special series of 3 video interviews. In Part One, published July 15, titled “The Race Out of the Door” (19 minutes), Engdahl discussed, inter alia: the deeper causes for the financial crisis; modern banking as a giant confidence game; America’s so called “Asia Pivot” and the Trans-Pacific Partnership; the bubbles in American stock and global bond markets; and too much power in too few hands on Wall Street.

In Part Two below, “There is No Such Thing as a Free Market” (11 minutes), Engdahl shares his interesting views on the managed nature of the precious metal markets; the naked short selling in the paper gold and silver markets; the rising gold stocks in vaults in China; the declining gold stocks in Western vaults; and the long-term perspectives for both physical gold and silver.

“Below is Part 2: There is No Such Thing as a Free Market”

The final Part Three will be released on July 17.

In this video titled “The world isn’t running out of oil; it’s running into it” (25 minutes), Engdahl, discussed with Lars Schall crucial issues with respect to the crude oil business and its geopolitical dimensions. Inter alia, they discuss: the importance of oil for the whole of our social lives; the beginning of the petrodollar; the research of Russian scientists on the origin of oil; and the fracking hype in the United States.

Matterhorn Asset Management is dedicated to wealth preservation through safe and secure silver and gold storage in Switzerland. Protect your gold in the world’s safest vaults. To become a client, click here.